

Being Flexible and Responding to Your Needs

"Frontline have long been effective partners of leadership development in the NHS. They bring a huge knowledge of the sector and our needs. On the Executive Fast Track Programme they have offered a couple of unique contributions: working off what was an initially vague and uninformed brief they have delivered a helpfully tailored and flexible response to our leadership development needs. They have helped us both develop thinking and action in our work. They bring a deeply pragmatic approach coupled with some creative thinking and robust challenge."

"Frontline Ltd provided technical support to our grant holders who were scaling up their successfully tested health care interventions across a number of locations. Six highly experienced clinical project teams (grant holders) were offered flexible, professional and timely support across different aspects of quality improvement and evaluation. Frontline consultants had excellent grasp of the current policy developments and were able to bring practical tools and experience from other sectors to support the programme. At the time, this was a new programme and Frontline also provided valuable support to our central programme team through learning capture. When difficulties arose, they handled these sensitively and honestly which enabled timely and appropriate resolution. Learning garnered through the first stage of programme delivery helped shape the future rounds of the programme."

"Consultants are sometimes met with a degree of scepticism but having Frontline's consultants embedded within the company made a real difference in not only convincing senior managers, but staff across Glasgow Life of the need to do things differently. I'm delighted to say that will continue long into the future."
